Tribe, timber company file $220.8M bid

Andrew Theen The Oregonian/OregonLive

An unconventional alliance between a Roseburg timber company and a tribal group submitted the lone bid for the Elliott State Forest, a $220.8 million transaction Oregon officials say is vital after years of slumping revenue.

One year after 50 organizations — from tribes to mega-timber companies to conservation groups — formally expressed interest in buying the 82,500-acre forest, only Roseburg-based Lone Rock Timber Management Partners and the Cow Creek Band of Umpqua Tribe of Indians went through with it, submitting their 75-page bid Tuesday just ahead of the state's deadline.

The timber company said it wants in because it already owns land nearby and sees a path to sustainably harvest timber — even amid old-growth trees — while protecting threatened species. The tribe wanted to reclaim some of its historic territory and dissuade outside companies from prospecting in Oregon.

"This is kind of an unprecedented partnership," said Jake Gibbs, Lone Rock's director of external affairs. But, primed for opposition, he also urged conservation groups to put their skepticism about the arrangement "on hold for a bit."

Report says lighter penalties such as life in prison cost less for both trial, incarceration

Tony Hernandez The Oregonian/OregonLive

A new study claims the trial and incarceration costs connected with Oregon's death penalty are almost twice as expensive than those for inmates who get life sentences or lesser penalties.

Researchers at Lewis & Clark Law School and Seattle University reviewed hundreds of aggravated murder cases from 1984 to 2013 in Oregon. The charge is the state's only crime eligible for the death penalty.

The 18-month study was released Wednesday, a month after Gov. Kate Brown announced she would continue a state moratorium on capital punishment. The study, funded by the anti-death penalty Oregon Justice Resource Center, aims to provide a data-driven, objective look at taxpayer costs, said Lewis & Clark law school professor Aliza Kaplan, one of the authors, who acknowledges she has worked to abolish the death penalty.

Despite the moratorium, the death penalty can still be applied to a defendant by a court. A Marion County jury took less than an hour last week to sentence a man to death after a jail stabbing in 2013, according to the Statesman Journal.

Since 1984, Oregon courts have sentenced 63 people to death. The state executed two in the 1990s by lethal injection; four have died from natural causes while on death row; 21 have had their sentences reduced; and one person was released, according to the study. That leaves 35 people on death row.

Researchers at the law school gathered county jail costs per inmate during a death penalty trial, public defender cost per case, and costs from the state Department of Corrections to house an inmate after conviction. Researchers also obtained costs from the state Department of Justice to SEE PENALTY, A4

OREGON STANDOFF

Second trial still on, but strategy is unclear

Maxine Bernstein The Oregonian/OregonLive

Federal prosecutors signaled Wednesday that they plan to go forward with a trial in February against the remaining occupiers charged in the takeover of the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge.

But they asked to delay summoning a jury as they continue to evaluate how to proceed against the six men and one woman still facing a federal conspiracy charge in the Oregon standoff case.

The prosecutors' much-anticipated court filing didn't reveal any hints of their strategy in the wake of the surprising acquittals of the occupation's key figures last month. Defense attorneys, including Oregon's federal public defender, and some of the defendants themselves urged the government to drop all charges.

It's possible that prosecutors could seek to re-indict them on less serious misdemeanor charges such as criminal trespassing or destruction of property while dismissing the conspiracy count that couldn't be proved against occupation leader Ammon Bundy and the others.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ethan Knight declined comment. The trial is set to start Feb. 14 for Jason Patrick of Bonaire, Georgia; Duane Leo Ehmer of Irrigon; Dylan SEE STANDOFF, A4

STATE BUDGET FORECAST

Revenues expected to be lower

Dana Tims The Oregonian/OregonLive

State economists say revenues could be lower than expected over three of the next four budget cycles, but that any drops are already built into long-term budget projections and shouldn't affect programs.

That message was contained in a new state revenue projection presented Wednesday to lawmakers in Salem.

"The upshot this quarter is that our revenue outlook is still very stable at this time," said Mark McMullen, an economist in the state Office of Economic Analysis.

Slowdowns seen in the national economy are also on the horizon for Oregon, which has been growing at an unsustainably fast rate over the past three to four years, he said.

"But that's not a bad thing," McMullen added. "We can't support this level of growth forever."

McMullen and a colleague, economist Josh Lehner, delivered the forecast during a joint meeting of the House's and Senate's revenue committees. Lawmakers and the governor rely on the quarterly forecasts to assemble and update budgets.

A slight uptick in revenues for the 2019-21 budget cycle will be offset by dipping revenue levels in years extending to the 2023-25 budget, according to the quarterly budget projection.

Near-term revenues are also presenting a challenge to lawmakers as they prepare for the 2017 legislative session. September's projection of a relatively small $6.1 million increase in expected general fund and lottery money for the close of 2015-17 is now forecast to decrease by $14.3 million.

Gov. Kate Brown is scheduled to release her proposed budget Dec. 1. In a statement, she expressed mixed reactions to the forecast. "On the positive side, job growth is higher and unemployment is lower than the national average and Oregon's economy remains stable overall," Brown said. "However, our obligations to fund important services such as public education and health care still exceed available revenues, and, looking ahead, there will be some very tough budget choices to make."

Oregon Gov. Kate Brown speaks during her 2015 State of the State address. Oregon's job growth has cooled down according to a new state forecast, which Brown says will require "some very tough budget choices." Don Ryan / Associated Press

Rep. Greg Smith, R-Heppner, House Republican caucus budget chair, said the forecast contains caution signs for legislators as they prepare to head to Salem in February for the 2017 session.

"While our economy appears stable for now, today's forecast should serve as a reminder that future growth is anything but guaranteed," he said.

With the defeat of Measure 97 — the tax on some corporations that would have raised $3 billion per year — the new forecast underscores the financial challenges facing lawmakers. Their first task will be in figuring out how to close a looming budget shortfall of $1.7 billion.

Short of tackling wholesale tax reform — an unlikely prospect — legislators are likely to turn to what the economists called "the usual suspects" of cigarette, liquor, gambling and marijuana taxes to close the gap.

In comparative terms, the budget is holding somewhat steady, according to the report. The $67.9 million drop in general fund and lottery revenue forecast earlier for 2017-19, for instance, is now forecast to be a drop of $52.3 million. And the $152.9 million decrease in total available resources for 2019-21 is now projected to show a net increase of $5.9 million.

On the whole, Oregon's economy is bouncing back from the recession, legislators heard.

Agriculture and heavy manufacturing have fully recovered. Timber and wood products are still behind where they were at the start of the recession, but losses in jobs and revenues now are far less than even a few years ago.

The overall job growth of 5,000 new jobs per month Oregon has added over the past two years is now slowing to about 3,000 jobs per month, McMullen said. But, as with other pieces of the forecast, that slowing is probably a good thing, he said.

"We only need 2,000 jobs a month to keep up with population growth," McMullen said. "A rate of 5,000 jobs eats up economic slack and it gets you to better economy, but it's not sustainable."

AFTER SCHOOL SATAN CLUB

First meeting draws protesters to Portland

Lizzy Acker
The Oregonian/OregonLive

The first official meeting of the After School Satan Club in the United States took place Wednesday at Sacramento Elementary School in Portland, drawing national members of the Satanic Temple and Catholic protesters from a group based out of Pennsylvania.

"The club is here to contrast the presence of the evangelical Good News Clubs, which are here specifically to proselytize to children," said Lucien Greaves, the Satanic Temple's national co-founder, who was on hand for the first official meeting of the club, an open house for parents, students and staff.

The club at Sacramento Elementary School is the first in the nation, but the Satanic Temple has applications out to schools across the country.

The Satanic Temple is a national organization based in Salem, Mass.. Its mission, according to its website, "is to encourage benevolence and empathy among all people, reject tyrannical authority, advocate practical common sense and justice, and be directed by the human conscience to undertake the individual will."

The organization is non-theistic and does "not promote a belief in a personal Satan."

The Good News Club is an evangelical after-school club, which, according to its website, is a Bible-based program "whose purpose is to evangelize boys and girls with the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and to establish (disciple) them in the Word of God and in a local church for Christian living."

Ron Imig, the assistant director of Child Evangelism Fellowship in Portland, which runs the Good News Clubs, said over the phone Wednesday of the After School Satan Club's first meeting, "They have that right even though we don't agree with what they're doing."

"They're operating under the Equal Access law," he added, the same rule the Good News Club operates under.

Four members of a Catholic group called "America Needs Fatima," part of the American Society for the Defense of Tradition, Family and Property, traveled to Portland to protest the club on Wednesday. They were joined by members of the community and a priest who happened to be in the area from Ohio.

Peter Miller, a member of the Catholic group, said they are "anti blasphemy." The group has previously protested things like "the Jerry Springer play" and "The Testament of Mary," another play, according to Miller.

Another member of the group, Charles Sulzen, said the goal of the protest is "stopping the worship of Satan in public areas."

"We're here to defend the rights of God against his archenemy," Burnham added.

Finn Rezz, the co-head of the Portland chapter of the Satanic Temple, said that members of the Satanic Temple are exercising their rights.

"Every one of us standing here is American," he continued, "and these are our values."

Some parents were less than thrilled about the club and protests. A father of a Sacramento student, Jose Delgado, said he was concerned about the Satan club.

"Everybody knows there's nothing good about a Satanic group," Delgado said. "The Devil's obviously an evil thing."

"They're trying to make it like, oh it's a positive thing but how can you feel safe or feel OK with your kids coming to school knowing that there's a satanic group here when we all know what they're really about," he added.

David Linn, a parent of a second grader at the school, said he thinks both groups are a problem.

"I think they should all be ashamed of themselves," Linn said.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK

Oregon man died trying to 'hot pot'

Jamie Hale
The Oregonian/OregonLive

Details have emerged about the Portland man who died in a Yellowstone hot spring in June, who was allegedly looking to "hot pot" in the park.

Colin Nathaniel Scott, a 23-year-old Portland resident, and his sister walked about 225 yards off the boardwalk near Pork Chop Geyser at the Norris Geyser Basin, looking for a place to "hot pot" or soak in an extremely hot natural spring.

That's according to a final report on the incident by Yellowstone National Park officials, who released the information in response to a Freedom of Information Request filed by KULR-8, a news station based in Billings, Montana.

While Scott was bending over to check the temperature of a spring, according to the report, he slipped and fell in, succumbing quickly to the boiling, acidic water.

"There's a closure in place

An aerial view of Excelsior Geyser and Grand Prismatic Spring, two of the geothermal features at Yellowstone National Park. National Park Service to keep people from doing that for their own safety," Lorant Veress, deputy chief ranger, told KULR. "It's a very unforgiving environment."

Scott's sister recorded the accident on her cellphone, officials wrote in the report, but the park has refused to release that video to the public.

Scott was not the first, and won't likely be the last victim of Yellowstone's gorgeous but dangerous geothermal features. The hot springs have claimed 22 lives since 1890, according to the park, far more than have been killed by grizzly bears or lightning strikes.

The danger lies in the heat. The pools can reach temperatures of up to 205 degrees Fahrenheit, enough to cause third-degree burns in seconds.

Warning signs have been posted in the park since at least 1888, but they have been regularly ignored for generations. Boarded walkways came to the park in the 1960s, but wandering off-trail persisted.

Today, Yellowstone officials can rely on social media to spread news of the dangers faster and farther than ever, though that same medium can just as easily be used to promote reckless behavior.

Earlier this year, a group of young Canadian tourists invoked outrage after walking onto the Grand Prismatic Spring at Yellowstone, filming their exploits for an online adventure series "High on Life."

After a swift reprimand from both park officials and the public, the group removed all photos and videos of their excursion, offering an apology instead.

CABLE FEES

Lawsuit claims cities misspent $14 million

Suit asks that fees be refunded to subscribers

Mike Rogoway
The Oregonian/OregonLive

A lawsuit filed this month alleges Portland and four of its suburbs have misused more than $14 million in fees levied on cable TV subscriptions.

The suit in Multnomah County Circuit Court alleges the cities spent those fees outside the narrow bounds authorized under federal law.

The cities levy the fees on Comcast and other cable TV companies, which typically pass the costs on to customers. The lawsuit asks the court to order the fees be refunded directly to subscribers.

"The cities have essentially collected all these funds together, pooled them, and this has created this slush fund," said Christopher Best, a Salem attorney who brought the suit on behalf of Portland resident Joel Ranck.

Best likened his litigation to suits against the Portland Water Bureau, in which court rulings found the bureau spent ratepayer money on projects beyond its authority.

Best declined to say how he connected to Ranck or what prompted him to bring the lawsuit now. Portland has yet to file a response.

Portland, Fairview, Gresham, Troutdale and Wood Village manage their cable TV franchises jointly through an organization called the Mt. Hood Cable Regulatory Commission.

They levy "public, educational, and governmental" fees on cable TV subscriptions, known collectively as PEG fees.

The lawsuit argues federal law restricts those fees to equipment costs for channels that broadcast public access and governmental programming. It says federal law does not allow spending on operating budgets, salaries, or grants to schools and other educational organizations.

FOREST

fund currently has more than $1.5 billion in assets and distributed about $55 million to K-12 schools in 2015, the forest has been a money loser since 2012 amid lawsuits with environmental groups over the protection of habitat for threatened species like the northern spotted owl, marbled murrelet and coastal coho salmon. No longer financially viable, the state started mapping out an exit strategy in 2014.

On Wednesday, the day after turning in the paperwork, the partners said they hope their bid strikes the right chord with Oregon Department of State Land officials, which set the sale parameters and will ultimately decide if the proposal passes muster. The tribe and timber company emphasized that the bid comes from local sources and includes provisions to maintain public access on at least half of the property.

But the prospect of selling public land to a private entity is still anathema for many environmental, hunting and conservation groups. Through the partners have brought in The Conservation Fund — which helps preserve land in all 50 states — as an adviser, they don't see the merits.

On Tuesday, a coalition of Oregon nonprofits sent a letter to Gov. Kate Brown, Treasurer Ted Wheeler and Secretary of State Jeanne Atkins condemning the process. "Privatizing the Elliott State Forest would set an incredibly dangerous precedent nationwide," the groups wrote.

"We saw an opportunity to bring common goals together in actually managing a forest in a proper way."

Michael Rondeau, Cow Creek Band of Umpqua Tribe of Indians chief executive

That concern didn't wane Wednesday.

Steve Pedery, conservation director at Oregon Wild, said the proposal is just what the state wanted. "They wanted a bid that got them out of the land management business," he said, "and they wanted one that had enough wrapping paper and tinsel on it to look politically palatable."

"But a clear cut is just a clear cut."

Michael Rondeau, the tribe's chief executive, said Cow Creek reached out to Lone Rock to try and find an arrangement that worked for everyone.

"We were concerned about out-of-state or even out-of-country ownership," he said. The tribe, which owns the Seven Feathers Casino Resort and other properties, has a well-established relationship with the timber company.

"We saw an opportunity to bring common goals together in actually managing a forest in a proper way," he said.

Rondeau said the tribe also saw a way to re-establish its foothold in Douglas and Coos County, after ceding 800 square miles of land to the U.S. government. Under the arrangement, the timber company would own an 87 percent stake in the forest, and the Cow Creek nation would own the remainder. Tribal members estimated their contributions to be $16 million.

According to the proposal, Lone Rock would take a $110.4 million loan from the Northwest Farm Credit Services. Two Lone Rock company officials are expected to pay the rest of the bill.

The application included letters of support from Douglas County Commissioners, timber giant Roseburg Forest Products and other regional organizations. If approved, Lone Rock pledges to create 40 new full or part-time jobs.

Some 20,625 acres of the land would be restricted from harvest to keep "older forest characteristics," with 95 percent of those acres applying to trees more than a century old.

Before it was a money loser, the forest netted an average of $8 million per year for the Common School Fund between 1997 and 2012.

Gibbs said he expects his company could easily log at least 35 million board feet off the Elliott, a level the state hasn't surpassed since 2000 and rarely approached in years since.

"We feel comfortable that we can do that sustainably forever," Gibbs said, while also meeting the habitat requirements to protect salmon, spotted owl and marbled murrelets.

Bob Sallinger, conservation director of the Audubon Society of Portland, said that comment alone should raise "tremendous red flags."

"If the state could get to 35 million board feet then it would have kept the forest," he said.

Because it received just one bid, the state land agency could evaluate the proposal and approve it without holding a public meeting or vote. But that's unlikely.

The Oregon Land Board, currently comprised of Brown, Wheeler and Atkins, is scheduled to meet Dec. 13 and is expected to take testimony from the public. If the state agency doesn't approve the deal, the land board could approve it in December.

PENALTY

defend appeals and other filings from defendants during higher court proceedings, such as the state Supreme Court.

What's missing: costs from district attorneys and the courts. Their budgets don't fully break down expenditures per case, according to the study.

The district attorneys, for example, don't account for the hourly cost of attorneys and staff per case but do break down incidental expenditures, such as supplies, expert witnesses and travel. As a result, the study's authors provided some expenditures they received from a handful of counties.

Of 374 aggravated murder trials the study looked at, 61 death penalty cases cost an average of $2.3 million compared with $1.4 million from the 313 cases that resulted in lesser punishments, a $918,896 difference or 1.7 times more, according to the study.

Without prison expenditures, the death penalty cases drop on average to $1.1 million compared to the $315,159 for the lesser sentences, which cost 3.5 times less. The report also looks at a smaller subset of cases from 2000 to 2013.

"Numerous states, as we describe in this report, have gotten rid of the death penalty," said Kaplan, who is also director of Lewis & Clark's Criminal Justice Reform Clinic. "There's a handful of states with moratoriums, including ours. So there's a lot of questioning of the death penalty currently around the country: its constitutionality (and) its value."

Public support for the death penalty appears mixed nationwide.

Since 2009, lawmakers have abolished the death penalty in New Mexico, Illinois, Connecticut, Maryland and most recently Nebraska, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

However after last week's general election, voters in Nebraska repealed the Legislature's abolition. Voters in California also rejected an effort to repeal the death penalty, and in Oklahoma, the electorate added language in the state's constitution declaring that capital punishment is not cruel and unusual.

In Oregon, defendants accused of aggravated murder get two lawyers plus state-funded investigators charged with learning as much as possible about the defendant and their family and life circumstances for the defense.

"Virtually everyone who is accused of aggravated murders is indigent," said third-year law student Venetia Mayhew, a co-author. "It's an incredibly expensive process, so the state is essentially covering the defense 99 percent of the time, or very much close to that."

Clatsop County District Attorney Josh Marquis, a death penalty supporter, made the correct assumption that the study's authors believe taxpayer money saved by eliminating the death penalty could be shifted to other criminal justice programs and other public systems.

"Do we really want to make decisions on justice issues based on whether we're saving or spending more money?" Marquis asked. "What if we showed it saved money to execute people more quickly? That would be a terrible reason to do it."

Anderson of Provo, Utah; Sean Anderson and Sandra Lynn Anderson, both of Riggins, Idaho; Darryl W. Thorn of Marysville, Washington, and Jake Ryan, of Plains, Montana.

Sean and Sandra Anderson were among the last four holdouts at the eastern Oregon bird sanctuary. The 41-day occupation ended when the FBI took them into custody on Feb. 11. Two others who were with them the final two weeks of the occupation, David Fry and Jeff Banta, were acquitted of all charges on Oct. 27, along with Ammon Bundy, his brother Ryan Bundy and three others.

Those set for trial in February did guard duty and held other mostly background roles during the occupation. They were among 26 people indicted on a conspiracy charge, eleven of whom have pleaded guilty. Two of those defendants have asked to withdraw their pleas in light of the October acquittals. The government dropped charges against another, Pete Santilli.

Defense lawyers are preparing to go to trial in three months as scheduled, said Ryan's lawyer Jesse Merrithew, who is acting as the liaison with prosecutors.

"Most of us have given up trying to figure out what they're doing," Merrithew said. "As far as we're concerned, we've got a trial to prepare for."

Merrithew noted that all the defense lawyers for this second round of prosecutions are court-appointed lawyers. "Everyday that we keep delaying is money that taxpayers are picking up," he said. "Apparently, they still don't know what they're going to do."

U.S. District Judge Anna J. Brown had requested the status report on the February trial be filed Wednesday, with suggested deadlines for the juror summonses and pretrial motions and documents. Yet while defense lawyers want 2,000 potential jurors summoned as soon as possible, prosecutors urged the court not to do that just yet, as they're still unsure what charges they will prosecute and against whom in February.

In other action Wednesday, Ryan Bundy's standby lawyer Lisa Ludwig noted that the government hasn't dismissed the theft of government property charge against him. The jury last month couldn't decide on the charge and it's unclear if prosecutors plan to refile it. Ludwig also said Bundy wants all his personal property seized by the FBI during his arrest and from the refuge to be returned to him.

Ryan Bundy has been transferred to Nevada to face federal prosecution there in the April 2014 standoff with federal agents over grazing rights at his father Cliven Bundy's ranch near Bunkerville, Nevada.

Trump pushes back against reports of transition turmoil

Noah Bierman and Lisa Mascaro
Tribune News Service

WASHINGTON — President-elect Donald Trump and his top aides pushed back aggressively Wednesday at accounts of a rocky transition, with Trump attacking The New York Times and his staff making efforts to assure the public that accounts of internal turmoil had been greatly exaggerated.

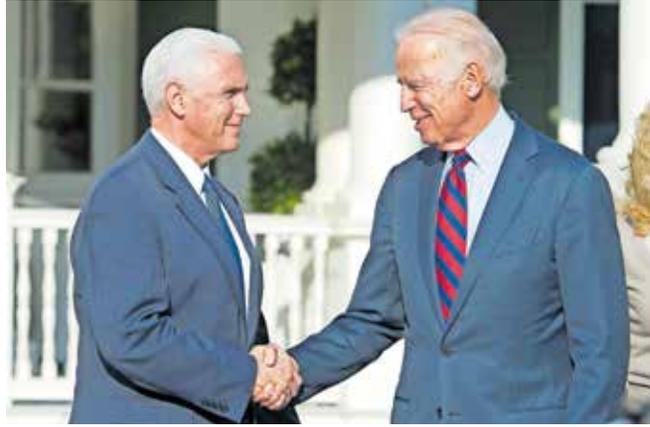

Despite the focus on public relations, there was little indication the team had progressed toward assembling an administration, and questions remained unanswered about the level of influence Trump's family would exert in the new White House.

Rooms set aside for Trump staffers at the Pentagon, for example, remained vacant Wednesday, an indication that Trump's team had yet to begin the complicated process of getting up to speed on the details of taking over the military and other sectors of government.

The State Department had also heard nothing from Trump's emissaries, even as Trump's staff released an extensive roster of foreign leaders who had spoken with Trump and Vice President-elect Mike Pence.

Trump's campaign manager, Kellyanne Conway was one of two top aides to speak with reporters in hopes of changing perceptions.

"You don't form a federal government overnight, and these are very serious issues, very serious appointments, very serious considerations," she said.

Conway said reports of firings and disorganization were false.

Yet she offered little clarity about who would be taking roles in the administration, including Trump's son-in-law, 35-year-old real estate investor Jared Kushner. She said she did not know whether Kushner would be getting security clearance to attend top-secret briefings, but left open the possibility when asked whether it would be appropriate.

Jason Miller, Trump's campaign communications director, tried to answer another set of criticisms, promising that Pence, who abruptly took over the transition team leadership from Christie on Friday, had begun "making good on President-elect Trump's promise that we're not going to have any lobbyists involved with the transition efforts."

Despite the lack of apparent progress, Trump received a vote of confidence from an unlikely source: Vice President Joe Biden, who met with Pence at the U.S. Naval Observatory, the vice president's official residence, where they dined with their wives.

"No administration is ready on Day One. We weren't ready on Day One. I've never met one that's ever been ready on Day One," Biden said. "But I'm confident on Day One, everything will be in good hands and they'll be able to handle everything."

CONGRESS

Schumer chosen new Democratic leader in Senate

McConnell will remain majority leader

Alan Fram Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans re-elected Mitch McConnell on Wednesday to be majority leader next year while Democrats picked Chuck Schumer to lead them, setting the chief actors as the chamber prepares for an agenda that will be dominated by Donald Trump and the GOP.

McConnell, 74, is a discreet but deadly master of the Senate's legislative chess game. His role will be to steer GOP bills to the desk of a president whose name he barely spoke during a tumultuous campaign in which many Republicans viewed Trump and his incendiary comments on Muslims, veterans and others as political poison.

"It's time to accept the results of the election, to lower the tone and to see what we can do together to make progress for the country," McConnell, from Kentucky, told reporters Wednesday.

As Senate minority leader, Schumer will assume his weakened party's most powerful remaining post as it struggles to define its role.

his No. 3 spot has been a virtual lock since last year, when he cemented votes for the top job after current Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., announced he'd retire.

McConnell and Schumer faced no opposition. Later Wednesday, Schumer visited McConnell in his office, telling a reporter afterward: "First meeting. Working out things."

"Where we can work together we will," Schumer told reporters about Trump, with whom he shares an affection for TV soundbites and sharp elbows.

But Schumer said he's also told the president-elect, "On issues where we disagree, you can expect a strong and tough fight."

STILL REELING

Democrats begin battling for future

Lisa Lerer Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Still reeling from a devastating defeat in last week's election, Democrats are beginning the process of charting the direction of their party in the Donald Trump era.

With Hillary Clinton and her team staying out of the public eye, liberal politicians have begun jockeying for control of the party's future.

The Democratic National Committee, the last bastion of party power in Washington, is quickly emerging as ground zero for the fight.

Already, around a dozen Democrats' names have been publicly floated to succeed interim chairwoman Donna Brazile, who replaced Florida Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz in July after she was caught up in a hacking scandal.

Minnesota Rep. Keith Ellison, a prominent progressive and the first Muslim elected to Congress, has emerged as an early contender, backed by much of the party's liberal wing.

Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean announced his intention Thursday to reclaim a post he held during the Bush administration. Former Maryland governor Martin O'Malley, DNC National Finance Chairman Henry Muñoz III and South Carolina Democratic Party Chairman Jaime Harrison have also said they're considering bids.

Shortfall grows in fund protecting pensions

Jonnelle Marte The Washington Post

The struggles continue for the insurance fund backing millions of multiemployer pension plans, according to a government report released Wednesday.

The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., which insures private pensions, said it is $58.8 billion short of the cash it needs to cover benefits for multiemployer pension funds that are expected to run out of money within 10 years. With roughly $2 billion in assets, the insurance fund is on pace to run out of money by 2025, if not sooner.

The growing deficit puts more pressure on Congress to raise the insurance premiums that companies pay into the multiemployer insurance fund or to come up with another solution to keep the insurance fund afloat. In June, the PBGC said premiums need to increase by 360 percent from the current rate of $27 per person to keep the program from running out of money. Any decision to raise the premiums paid by employers needs to come from Congress. PBGC director Tom Reeder said Wednesday that the increase needed will become more dramatic if no changes are made.

"The longer they wait to act, the quicker they'll have to raise premiums," he said.

Earlier this year, the Treasury Department rejected a proposal to reduce benefits for retirees in the Central States Pension Fund, the largest troubled pension fund that is backed by the PBGC. Without help, the pension fund that provides benefits to former truckers and their families will run out of money by 2025, the same year as the PBGC's multiemployer fund.

The proposal was made under a 2014 law intended to shore up the PBGC by allowing struggling pension funds to cut benefits for retirees, among other changes. But Treasury has yet to approve any of the requests to cut benefits that were submitted under the program. At least four proposals are currently being reviewed.

The troubles are plaguing the insurance fund for multiemployer pensions, which allow businesses to join together and share the costs of providing pensions to their workers and retirees. The insurance fund for single employer plans, where one company pays for the costs of its pension, is more financially stable. While most of the 10 million people in multiemployer pension plans covered by the PBGC are in plans that are financially sound, up to 1.5 million are in plans that expected to run out of money over the next 20 years.

Airstrikes again pound Aleppo

54 killed in rebel-held areas of northern Syria

Sarah El Deeb and Philip Issa
Associated Press

BEIRUT — Bombs rained down on rebel-held eastern Aleppo for a second straight day Wednesday, pounding a district that houses several medical facilities, including the central blood bank, and forcing Syrian staff and patients in the only remaining pediatric hospital to cower in a basement as buildings collapsed around them.

At least 54 people were killed in airstrikes and artillery shelling across northern Syria, part of a long-anticipated offensive against rebel-held areas announced by Russia, a key ally of Syrian President Bashar Assad. The bombardment hit in besieged neighborhoods of Aleppo, as well as the surrounding countryside and the nearby rebel-held province of Idlib.

Russia said its air raids were only targeting Idlib and the central province of Homs to root out militants of the Islamic State group and Syria's al-Qaida affiliate. But Syrian warplanes were pounding rebel-held districts of Aleppo, home to nearly 275,000 people.

Residents said the aerial campaign intensified Wednesday.

The Russian declaration of the offensive came hours after President Vladimir Putin and U.S. President-elect Donald Trump discussed Syria in a phone call and agreed on the need to combine efforts in the fight against what the Kremlin called their No. 1 enemy — "international terrorism and extremism."

Teen birth rate higher in rural U.S.

Karen Kaplan Los Angeles Times

The teen birth rate in America's small towns is 63 percent higher than in its biggest cities, a new government report reveals.

In 2015, there were 18.9 births for every 1,000 women between the ages of 15 and 19 living in counties with large urban areas, according to a report published Wednesday by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. That compares with 30.9 births per 1,000 women in the same age group who lived in rural counties, the report said.

In between were counties with small- and medium-sized cities and suburbs. There, the birth rate was 24.3 babies per 1,000 women ages 15 to 19.

Though the teen birth rate varied widely between cities, towns and hamlets, municipalities of all sizes had one thing in common: All experienced steady declines in teen birth rates between 2007 and 2015.

Large urban counties recorded the biggest drop over those eight years. In 2007, the birth rate for 15-to-19-year-olds was 38.1 births per 1,000 women. It has since plunged by 50 percent.

Next came counties with smaller urban areas, where the teen birth rate is now 44 percent lower than the 43.1-per-1,000 rate seen in 2007.

Rural counties started out with the highest birth rate — 49.1 births per 1,000 women ages 15 to 19 — and saw it fall 37 percent over eight years.

The authors of the report don't know why the teen birth rate was lower — and falling faster — in large urban areas.

Russian bribery probe widens

David Filipov The Washington Post

MOSCOW — Is the "liberal wing" of President Vladimir Putin's cabinet under attack?

Russia's state-run news agency reported Wednesday that more officials could be targeted in the corruption probe that has already led to the arrest of the country's economic development minister. Other news reports went so far as to name names, all of them of officials close to Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev, leader of the so-called "liberals," who tend to favor a smaller state role in society and greater international outreach.

Medvedev's faction is seen to be in an eternal struggle against the Kremlin's "siloviki" — a force that includes officials from the military, law enforcement and security services in Putin's inner circles.

At the center of the current tug of war is the privatization of major oil assets. On Tuesday, Alexei Ulyukayev, the economic development minister, was charged with demanding and receiving a $2 million bribe allegedly for approving the $5 billion purchase of a 50 percent stake in the Bashneft oil company by the state-run oil giant Rosneft.

Ulyukayev initially opposed the deal, which eventually went through in October. Rosneft is led by Igor Sechin, seen as a close Putin lieutenant and one of the leaders of the siloviki.

"The arrest of Ulyukayev served as another proof that Igor Sechin is a very powerful figure," Andrei Kolesnikov of the Moscow Carnegie Center wrote in a commentary. "In the hierarchy of the elites he occupies one of the prized positions for influencing the economy, the political landscape, and the administrative system of weights and measures. Everyone has understood that."

Family needs to learn the true value of spending time with grandparents

Carolyn Hax

Carolyn Hax is on leave. This column originally ran on June 16, 2013.

Carolyn: I have a bizarre dilemma that needs a light touch in handling. My wife, my children and I are very close to my grandparents, who live within an easy drive. We still see them often, and never miss birthdays, holidays, etc.

My grandparents are generous with gifts but, in recent years, gifts have been replaced by checks (usually about $100) because it's harder for them to get around to stores. No problems there, of course. The issue is that the amount given to me is usually double the amount given to my wife, who spends as much time with my grandparents as I do, if not more. I seriously doubt this is an intentional slight.

My guess is that they don't think of the implications for my wife, who is in a small way somewhat hurt by the move. It's just a sense-of-worth thing that unfortunately is manifested in a monetary gift.

Is there an easy way to handle this without hurting someone's feelings or coming off as ungrateful? — T.

"Light touch"? How 'bout no touch. Wow. Sure, a stroke of the pen could indeed bring equality to Giftland, but that route is hardly "easy."

For one, there's nothing simple about hurting your grandparents with the suggestion that their gifts haven't been warmly received, and/or insulting them with the implication that they haven't been generous enough.

It's also an illusion that Giftland is in any need of equality. Your grandparents have known you, presumably, since your infancy. Even if you don't agree that this alone justifies a larger gift, surely you — or your wife — can appreciate that others would?

The genuinely easy solution is for your wife to realize she can't expect her love or validation to come in the form she prefers. Or at all, though she's apparently close to your grandparents.

I realize this is advice for her more than it is for you, but I hope you'll encourage her to see that having her children enjoy their great-grandparents is its own validation.

It would take shortsightedness of epic proportions to sell this for a hundred bucks.

IN MY OPINION

Donald Trump has publicly bragged that he hasn't paid federal income taxes. He blamed Internal Revenue Service regulations for allowing him to not pay taxes. Evan Vucci / Associated Press

Let's get rich people's money

Greg Muirhead

One of the most bizarre aspects of Donald Trump's election victory is that an America angrily frustrated with the lack of growing personal income has elected a person who embodies the widening gap between the rich and the rest of us. And he doesn't pay income taxes!

Trump says he's a billionaire. But it's been revealed that he probably didn't pay personal federal income taxes for at least 18 years, according to a New York Times analysis of his state income tax filing from 1995. He has publicly bragged that he hasn't paid federal income taxes.

But a billionaire certainly can afford to pay taxes. Trump blamed Internal Revenue Service regulations for allowing him to not pay taxes.

So let's fix it. Let's go get his money. He owes it to us.

And not just Trump. Let's go get all rich people's money. Let's raise taxes on rich people and make sure they pay those taxes. Redistribute that money to the rest of us through social benefits and cash payments.

This is something a democracy can do. There are relatively few rich people compared to the rest of us; we can outvote them. Let's press our legislators on this issue. Make it the big issue. Focus on it. Don't let it get confused with and overrun by other issues.

To my mind, effective protests need to have a specific purpose in support of an achievable goal. I suggest the following slogan: "Raise Taxes on Rich People and Make Them Pay!"

Pressure our state representatives in Congress to raise taxes on the rich. Get petitions going on this. Organize protests specific to this issue alone. Isn't this what we really want? Don't re-elect representatives to Congress who don't support this. Make their political careers hang on this issue.

After all, this is the way it used to be, as they say, back in the good old days.

Under Eisenhower, in 1952, the marginal income tax rate

Marginal tax rate

The percentage taken from an additional dollar of income beyond the filer's particular tax bracket. This method aims to tax filers based on what they earn, with lower income filers taxed at a lower rate than higher income earners.

on the highest incomes was more than 90 percent. Ike never could see why rich people should get tax breaks, and neither should we.

Tax rates for rich people fell dramatically under Reagan and got worse under Clinton. In 1995, the marginal tax rate for those with high incomes dropped to 39.6 percent. George W. Bush, of course, further whittled away at rich people's tax rate. Under President Obama, the marginal tax rate went up slightly to 39.6 percent on income of more than $467,000.

So who's looking out for us? Let's go back to something like the Eisenhower years. I like Ike. I suggest that anyone who earns an income of at least $250,000 get a hefty marginal tax rate hike of at least 50 percent. Make it 75 percent on people who make at least $500,000. And jack that rate up to 92 percent on people who make a million dollars or more. They can afford it and still live very well. And we, who enabled them to get all that money, should get most of it back.

Rich people in our country benefit at the expense of the rest of us. Let's end this. Raise taxes on the rich and make sure they pay these taxes.

TRUMP AND HEALTH CARE

While Obamacare is not perfect, it has provided health insurance to 20 million Americans. But how many of them would be able to afford Donald Trump's free-market plan? Tax-deductible health care premiums and health savings accounts would only benefit those able to participate.

The Oregon Health Plan is in danger of collapse if the Trump administration turns down the state's request for continued funding, as it is likely to do, since he has proposed a block grant for Medicaid funding. Those of us on Medicare also face a potential crisis, as Trump has proposed turning Medicare into a voucher program: Here is your voucher for $1,500. Good luck with your $15,000 hospital bill.

There is only one solution: a publicly funded system to cover everyone. In the recent election, voters in Corvallis and Ashland voted overwhelmingly in support of universal health care. Earlier in the fall, the Portland City Council unanimously approved a resolution in support of health care for all. All of these resolutions were initiated by Health Care for All Oregon (hcao.org). TRUMP AND 'POLITICAL CORRECTNESS'

Since the election of Donald Trump, a number of articles have been written praising his victory as a rebuke of the "politically correct leftists in government." These articles make the argument that President-elect Trump's rhetoric, however vulgar it may be, has no actual impact on the American people, because words alone cannot cause harm.

In its most literal application, this sentiment is true; words cannot physically cause harm in the same way a knife or a bullet can. However, the normalization of derogatory, sexist and bigoted language can prevent the country as a whole from moving toward a more tolerant and diverse society.

When Syrian refugees are referred to as Muslim extremists, we no longer see them as victims of a totalitarian regime; we see them as the enemy. When Somali immigrants and refugees are referred to as a "disaster" for Minnesota, we dehumanize their struggle.

I am not the moral arbiter of our nation and am, therefore, in no position to accuse Donald Trump of being a racist. What I will assert is that, as president of the United States, he must choose his words carefully. Being tolerant and appreciative of cultures and lifestyles different than your own is not "politically correct" — it is American.

Brett Howell, Salem

LIBERALS AND FREE SPEECH

I can't help but wonder why the liberal segment of society does not understand how they've assisted in the election of Donald Trump. This is a nation that has always valued and protected free speech. Yet in recent years, the formation of "politically correct" terms have baffled and eluded most people who have an average command of the English language. It's difficult for a lot of folks to express their opinions without offending someone else, if the proper "terminology" is not used.

Liberals have created a jargon of their very own, creating frustration and anger for those who do not share this elitism.

Apparently, the duct tape has been ripped away from the mouths of those who wish themselves to be heard. They voted.

Ezeli seeks a second opinion on ailing knee

Big man's latest medical checkup suggests recovery could drag on

Joe Freeman The Oregonian/OregonLive

The Trail Blazers' "Sheriff" is having his six-shooter evaluated. Again.

Festus Ezeli did not travel with the team to Houston for its five-game East Coast trip on Wednesday, according to coach Terry Stotts, opting to seek another medical opinion on his ailing left knee. The defensive-minded center, signed as a free agent by the Blazers over the summer to shore up their interior defense, has not played this season while recovering from an August procedure on his knee.

Ezeli appeared to be making progress toward a return last month, when he went through portions of a practice on Oct. 18 and announced afterward that "The Sheriff (was) back in town." But he has endured swelling and pain since, and apparently there is concern about the long-term health of his knee.

Ezeli missed the entire 2013-14 NBA season after undergoing surgery on his right knee to reinforce his MCL and PCL and had arthroscopic surgery on his left knee in January. The Blazers and Ezeli have long insisted that he's in the middle of a "process" with his rehabilitation and, as far back as media day, President of Basketball Operations Neil Olshey hinted that it might take months for the 6-foot-11 center to see the floor.

GM working to 'get things back on track'

Jamie Goldberg The Oregonian/OregonLive

There hasn't been any offseason for Gavin Wilkinson.

Immediately after the Timbers were eliminated from playoff contention after posting a 4-1 loss to the Vancouver Whitecaps on the final day of the regular season, the Timbers general manager and his staff began focusing on what moves the club needed to make in the offseason to avoid another disappointing year in 2017.

"If you analyze this season, we failed," Wilkinson said. "We accept that. ... In professional sports, everyone is under pressure, and I'm under pressure to figure it out. We've got to make sure we get things back on track."

After winning the MLS Cup in 2015, the Timbers were eliminated from the CONCACAF Champions League and failed to qualify for the MLS Cup playoffs in 2016. Portland finished the season with just 44 points, its lowest point

ALLEN GOES PRO OVER UO

The Olympian/wide receiver decides to forgo his collegiate eligibility to hurdle professionally.

Tyson Alger The Oregonian/OregonLive

EUGENE — Devon Allen appreciates a good story, and over the past several years he's been writing one himself.

The college athlete gained fame on the football field and track, overcoming a knee injury to win another national hurdling title and earn a spot on the Olympic team.

But now, after announcing Wednesday that he'll forgo his remaining collegiate eligibility in football and track to focus professionally on his hurdling career, Allen has a new goal.

He plans to return from his latest injury to become the best hurdler in the world.

"I've done this to my other knee before and came back faster," Allen said. "For me, I think it just makes a good story. If I come back this summer and win a world championship, that's the greatest scenario, right?"

The decision to forgo his remaining year of football eligibility and two years of running track at Hayward Field was a necessary step in achieving that goal, Allen said, but that didn't make the decision any easier.

Over the past three years Allen has turned from a four-star wide receiver recruit from Arizona into one of the faces of the UO athletic department.

He won the NCAA outdoor 110-meter hurdles title as a freshman, won the USA title that summer and turned into one of the best receivers in the Pac-12 that fall.

Devon Allen's career highlights

Rio Olympics: Finished fifth in the 110-meter hurdles after winning the U.S. championship at Hayward Field to qualify.

UO track: Won NCAA hurdling titles as a freshman and junior.

UO football: Caught 41 passes for 684 yards and seven touchdowns as a redshirt freshman in 2014, the year the Ducks made it to the national title game.

OF NOTE

Porcello, Scherzer win Cy Young Awards

Rick Porcello of the Boston Red Sox won the AL Cy Young Award by a narrow margin and Max Scherzer of the Washington Nationals took the NL prize.

Porcello led the majors with 22 wins, and beat out Detroit's Justin Verlander and Cleveland's Corey Kluber. Porcello got just eight first-place votes from members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America while Verlander drew 14. But Porcello drew more support across the board and was listed by all 30 voters — Verlander was left off two ballots.

Scherzer became the sixth pitcher to win the Cy Young in both leagues, earning the NL honor by a wide margin. He led the majors with 284 strikeouts and topped the league with 20 wins, and beat out Chicago Cubs teammates Jon Lester and Kyle Hendricks.

Scherzer won the AL honor in 2013 while pitching in a Detroit rotation with Porcello and Verlander.

Stamkos out indefinitely

Tampa Bay Lightning captain Steven Stamkos has a lateral meniscus tear in his right knee and will be sidelined indefinitely.

General manager Steve Yzerman announced the diagnosis Wednesday after Stamkos returned home for further evaluation of the injury the two-time NHL scoring champion suffered Tuesday night in a 4-3 victory over the Detroit Red Wings.

Marcus Mariota is feeling more comfortable with every game that passes with the Tennessee Titans.

Considering how he's performed through just 22 career games, that's news the rest of the AFC South and NFL don't want to hear.

"He's just getting better and better as we go," Titans wide receiver Rishard Matthews said Wednesday of Mariota. "I think that's showing. I think he's going to continue to get better. I don't think we've even seen the best of him yet, so that's kind of scary actually."

Mariota was chosen AFC Offensive Player of the Week on Wednesday after throwing for 295 yards and four touchdowns in a 47-25 win over the Green Bay Packers — his third such award.

The quarterback credited tight end Delanie Walker and running back DeMarco Murray along with his offensive line with helping him put up such numbers.

"I'm really just kind of a result of that," Mariota said.

With his latest performance, Mariota became the first quarterback in NFL history to score four total touchdowns in six of his first 22 career starts. It's just part of the numbers the No. 2 pick overall out of Oregon in 2015 has been compiling.

Mariota ranks fifth all-time for most TD passes (33) before turning 23, behind Drew Bledsoe and Fran Tarkenton (40), Jameis Winston (39) and Josh Freeman (35). Mariota already has two of the franchise's top three games in terms of passer rating, a stat that doesn't include his perfect 158.3 rating in his NFL debut because he didn't throw at least 20 passes.

He also has matched Warren Moon's 1987 franchise record with at least two TD passes in six straight games, a mark Mariota will have a chance to take for himself Sunday when the Titans (5-5) visit Indianapolis (4-5).

Packers claim RB Michael

The Green Bay Packers have claimed Seattle RB Christine Michael on waivers, a source said, confirming an NFL.com report. Michael started seven games for the Seahawks, leading them with 469 rushing yards on 117 carries and six rushing touchdowns. He was also caught 20 passes for 96 yards.

FROM B1

total since 2012, and became the first team since 2006 to miss the playoffs the year after winning the MLS Cup.

While Wilkinson and Timbers coach Caleb Porter have said they accept responsibility for the disappointing season, both have tried to be realistic about the factors that led to the discouraging year.

The Timbers dealt with a constrained salary cap heading into 2016 because player bonuses from winning the MLS Cup count against the salary cap the following year. While those constraints won't be as significant in 2017, a number of players' contracts were redone after the MLS Cup victory.

The salary cap constraints in 2016 forced Portland to transfer left back Jorge Villafana, and the Timbers failed to re-sign winger Rodney Wallace, and Portland struggled at both positions throughout the year. The cap also made it difficult for Portland to add quality depth in the offseason, which was exposed in 2016 as the Timbers dealt with an onslaught of injuries. Porter started 30 different lineups due to the injuries, and inconsistency on the field was an issue.

"When you have a cap system and you can only spend it on so many players and you're coming off a season in 2015 that financially hurt the team in 2016, you've got to make the most of a situation that was less than ideal," Wilkinson said. "But 100 percent, we could have done things differently. It didn't play out how we liked or how we envisioned. Not all the signings that we made were as successful or as meaningful to the group as we would have liked."

Both Wilkinson and Porter have been clear about Portland's positional needs. The Timbers hope to sign three or four starting-caliber players in the offseason: two wingers, a holding midfielder and a central defender. The club also needs to add depth, Wilkinson said.

"We're in a stage now where we're narrowing in on a couple of options," Wilkinson said. "There's a lot of traveling; there's a lot of watching players right now. We're not going to be in a rush. We need to get the pieces right, and they need to be the right fit."

While the Timbers are planning to make some significant changes in the offseason, Wilkinson said the club does not view 2017 as a rebuilding year.

Wilkinson said he and his staff are scouting and targeting international players and MLS veterans to ensure that the club has the right balance of new talent and proven MLS players. The club has already added academy product Marco Farfan.

"It's important for us to be patient and strategic in what we're doing," Wilkinson said. "For me, it's a matter of making sure that we have enough quality players to be successful and making sure the balance within the team is right."

Gleeson pleads no contest, Ridgewell up next

Timbers goalkeeper Jake Gleeson pleaded no contest Wednesday to being drunk when he rear-ended another driver in Lake Oswego in October and was allowed by a judge to enter into an alcohol diversion program.

Liam Ridgewell is scheduled to enter a plea in Lake Oswego Municipal Court to a charge of driving under the influence of intoxicants on December.

DUCKS

Carrington accused of pushing, injuring man

Andrew Greif
The Oregonian/OregonLive

EUGENE — Oregon Ducks star receiver Darren Carrington shoved a man, breaking his arm, just hours after UO's October home game against Arizona State, the man said.

Mike Holland told The Oregonian/OregonLive that Carrington pushed him off a curb and into the street early on Oct. 30. Holland and three witnesses with him at the time called it an unprovoked attack, which may have been a case of mistaken identity.

Through a UO athletics spokesman, Carrington declined to respond to the allegations. Through another UO athletics spokesman, coach Mark Helfrich said the team was "aware of the incident" and that undisclosed discipline has been handled internally.

Holland, 22, a 2016 UO business school graduate who lives in Austin, Texas, said he was visiting Eugene to watch the Arizona State game with friends. About 2 a.m. on Oct. 30, near campus, Holland said Carrington approached his group and, unprovoked, shoved him off a curb into the street, where he broke his arm in the fall.

ment and reported the incident to police that morning. Holland and two of the three witnesses who spoke with The Oregonian/OregonLive said they also talked to a Eugene police detective investigating the case.

Eugene police would not comment or release the report because the investigation remained open, according to a police spokeswoman.

Holland spoke to The Oregonian/OregonLive on the record about the incident, while the three witnesses who corroborated his story asked that their names not be used.

"All I want is some kind of accountability," Holland said.

Carrington did not play the first two series against USC on Nov. 5, Oregon's next game after Holland said he reported the incident to police. Helfrich, asked after the game if there was any reason why the star sat out, said no. Carrington played but did not start in last Saturday's home loss to Stanford.

A redshirt junior, he will be eligible to forgo his final season and declare for the NFL draft.

Holland said the incident occurred after his group was walking through the parking lot near UO's Prince Lucien Campbell Hall on their way home from Rennie's, a popular off-campus bar.

Holland said they saw a commotion involving several football players in the parking lot near Prince Lucien Campbell but did not engage with anyone from that group before continuing to walk. Holland said he had a drink earlier in the evening but was not intoxicated at the time.

They were a few blocks from the parking lot, at an apartment complex on Alder Street between 14th and 15th avenues, when Carrington and an unidentified companion approached them after 2 a.m., Holland and the witnesses said.

They said Carrington was wearing face paint as part of a Halloween costume, which matches photos from that night posted on his Instagram account and a Snapchat video that Holland said he shot earlier that night and sent to police. Holland and his friends, none of whom know Carrington personally, each said they "instantly recognized" the junior receiver.

They said Carrington yelled at the group that he'd "heard what you said about me" from a car. Holland said the group did not have a car that night and believes that Carrington confused Holland or his group with someone else.

"Before I had even time to process what was going on fully, I was pushed at full force, kind of like you would to a bench press, from Carrington," Holland said.

"As I was breaking my fall on the asphalt with my right hand, I landed pretty forcefully. That's when I broke my arm."

They said they saw a shoulder-width tattoo of Carrington's last name on his back, because he was shirtless.

After the alleged shove, Holland and witnesses also said Carrington began yelling at the group as they began walking to the hospital, saying, "I'm Darren Carrington, No. 7, wide receiver for the Ducks, that's right, Darren Carrington, San Diego, California," Holland said.

Holland said his father sent an email Nov. 10 to UO president Michael Schill and athletic director Rob Mullens about the incident.

Citing student privacy laws, a UO spokesman said he could not share whether any student conduct investigation into the alleged incident was open.

BEAVERS

McGiven encouraged by passing game

Gina Mizell
The Oregonian/OregonLive

CORVALLIS — No Oregon State receiver totaled more than 65 receiving yards Saturday against UCLA.

But to co-offensive coordinator Kevin McGiven, the encouraging stat was that four Beavers also recorded at least four catches in a game where they were challenged to beat the Bruins' swarming man coverage. For a passing game that has been one of the worst in college football this season — and will be missing hospitalized receiver Seth Collins against Arizona — McGiven hopes the performance in Pasadena sparks a stretch-run surge for the Beavers' receivers.

"I know everybody didn't get a bunch of opportunities, but it was spread around a little bit more," McGiven said.

Entering 2016, wide receiver was regarded as arguably the Beavers' deepest and most talented position group. But for the bulk of the season, usually only one receiver has gotten going as a primary target in each game. Early on it was Collins (36 catches, 418 yards, one touchdown). In the season's second half, it's been Victor Bolden (43 catches, 528 yards, two touchdowns).

Against UCLA, however, Bolden totaled five receptions for 51 yards, while Collins had two grabs for 44 yards and Jordan Villamin four catches for 35 yards. Running back Artavis Pierce was a reliable check-down option, with six catches for 37 yards. And Timmy Hernandez led the bunch with five catches for 65 yards, impressing McGiven with his versatility to play inside and outside and use physicality and technique to break free from press coverage on a slant route or turn the cornerback around while executing a double move.

With Collins out Saturday and Hunter Jarmont doubtful against the Wildcats, Villamin will move back into a starting role. Xavier Hawkins and Trevon Bradford could get some more opportunities in four-wide sets.

And after the passing game's performance against UCLA, where quarterback Marcus McMaryion also graded out with his best performance of the season on making reads, McGiven is confident the Beavers "can get after some matchups in the secondary" against an Arizona defense that ranks 109th nationally with 266.5 yards allowed per game.

Devon Allen

ALLEN

FROM B1

As a redshirt freshman in 2014, Allen caught 41 passes for 684 yards and seven touchdowns, becoming a reliable target for Marcus Mariota as the Ducks advanced to the national championship game.

But Allen didn't play in the title game, having torn the ACL in his right knee during the Rose Bowl. The injury sidelined him for the 2015 track season, though he returned to football that fall.

He was never the same on the football field in 2015 as it took time for him to readjust to his surgically repaired knee, but it was a non-issue during the following track season. Allen returned to the track to win the NCAA title in the 110 hurdles, two years after claiming his first one. During the summer, he also won the USA championship at Hayward Field, clinching his spot on the Olympic team.

The next few months didn't go as planned, however. Allen finished fifth at the Olympics, a placing he called disappointing. After rejoining the football program this fall, he suffered his latest setback when he crumpled to the turf in Nebraska, clutching his left knee.

Today, Allen is six weeks removed from surgery and has his range of motion back. He's running in the pool and starting to lift weights again with the hope of being able to sprint by late December or January.

From that point, Allen will put blinders on to focus on his latest goal. For the past two years Allen has received plenty of publicity for being the football-playing hurdler, or vice versa, saying his dream was to play in the NFL and run track professionally. And while Allen said he wouldn't rule out a return to football, his focus is now 100 percent on track.

"My ideal scenario is to run track for the next couple years, then at the 2020 Olympics win a gold medal, have the world record, then I can put that to the side and play football," he said.

Things will happen fast for Allen over the coming weeks and months. He hasn't signed an agent, but he said he'll start making calls soon. Then he'll have to figure out where he wants to train full time and what endorsement deals to sign.

Despite his setbacks, Allen said he achieved nearly everything he set out to do in college. He proved he was more than just speed on the football field.

The only thing left for him on the track would be the collegiate record, which was only three hundredths of a second faster than what he's run. And Allen will graduate in spring with his degree, which was his main priority to begin with.

"Overall I think I had a pretty good career and I think I'll be happy with it," Allen said. "If I would tell my friends or my kids that, back in the day, your dad did this, I'll be pretty proud of it."

LAMAR 63, OREGON STATE 60

Beavers' carelessness catches up to them

The Oregonian/OregonLive

CORVALLIS — Oregon State could not shake off a second consecutive slow start and dropped its first game of the season, falling to Lamar 63-60 on Wednesday at Gill Coliseum to drop to 2-1.

KEY RUN

After Oregon State cut its deficit to 31-27 in the second half, Lamar responded with a 10-2 run over the next 2:04 to take a 41-29 lead with 15:23 remaining. It was the Cardinals' largest lead of the game.

BLAZERS

FROM B1

Ezeli's latest medical checkup suggests this process could drag on longer than expected.

Ezeli is scheduled to rejoin the Blazers after they land Sunday in New York.

Slumping Leonard shoots long after loss

Long after the Blazers left the Moda Center on Tuesday night, with a humbling 113-88 loss to the Chicago Bulls fresh on their minds, one player stayed on the court for a

Meyers Leonard, who has been filling in for the injured Al-Farouq Aminu in the starting lineup, went through an extensive post-game shooting session.

At the basket near the visiting bench, the 7-foot-1 big man hoisted shots from a variety of spots until well after 10 p.m. as video coordinator/player development coach Jonathan Yim rebounded.

Leonard has been mired in a long-range shooting slump most of the season and endured a particularly cold outing Tuesday, when he missed all six of his field goals, including all five of his three-point attempts.

Leonard, whose size and shooting are his greatest strengths, is shooting just 33 percent from the field this season (18 for 55), including 21 percent from three-point range (6 for 29).

Over the past four games, when he's seen a significant uptick in playing time because of Aminu's absence, Leonard has made just 2 of 17 three-pointers.

Stotts embraces Pride Night at Moda Center

In an effort to "celebrate diversity and inclusion," the Blazers on Tuesday hosted "Pride Night" at the Moda Center.

As they lost on the court, the Blazers did a variety of things off the court to raise awareness and money to support the LGBTQ community.

As part of the festivities, the team created special rainbow lapel pins in the shape of its pinwheel logo for staff to wear.

Stotts had one attached to his suit as he roamed the sideline.

"I'm supporting diversity," Stotts said.

"I think Portland is very supportive of various lifestyles, and I've got friends and family who fall into those groups. So I'm being supportive."

Portland: The Blazers are coming off a blowout loss to the Chicago Bulls on Tuesday. Portland missed its first 11 shots of the game, fell behind by 21 points after the end of the first quarter and never really threatened to make it competitive. None of the Blazers shot well against the Bulls. Meyers Leonard missed all six of his shots and went scoreless in 15 minutes. The Blazers have struggled on defense and to control rebounds in the first 12 games of the season, but Tuesday against Chicago was one of the few games where their offense was equally poor. Portland is 1-4 against teams with winning records, with the lone win coming against the Gordon Hayward- and Derrick Favors-less Utah Jazz on opening night.

Houston: The Rockets are playing the second of back-to-back games after a road loss to the Oklahoma City Thunder on Wednesday. James Harden had 13 points and 13 assists against Oklahoma City. New Rockets coach Mike D'Antonio has turned Harden into a point guard and the Rockets star has been fantastic as a scorer and facilitator to start the season. Houston also signed Eric Gordon and Ryan Anderson in free agency, giving Harden more shooters around him in D'Antonio's wide open attack. Harden has recorded at least 30 points and 15 assists in four of the 11 games this season. That's already the most in any season by a player since Magic Johnson had six 30-15 games during the entire 1986-87 season. This is the first of three meetings between the Rockets and Blazers. They split the season series 2-2 last season.

ACES ON BRIDGE

The Dyspeptics rubber bridge table has a reputation for wildness — both in the bidding and the play, as well as in the post-mortem, of course. But on today's deal, they might have outdone themselves, since each of the players took an action that could have been construed as anywhere between aggressive and completely certifiable.

Mind you, it was not an easy hand for North-South to bid, and the final contract of six spades was a fair one — though it could have been set by force on a trump lead. When West led a top club, South wasted no time in winning and trying to cash three hearts to dispose of his losers. This line was unlikely to succeed, given the auction. Indeed, East ruffed in to play a trump, and that was curtains for declarer.

Before South could go into his usual litany of excuses, he noted the red glint in North's eye, and instead meekly requested enlightenment.

South must duck the opening lead, win the trump shift in hand, then unblock the club ace. He can then cash two hearts, pitching dummy's last club. His next move will be to ruff a club low, then come back to hand, first with the diamond ace and subsequently with a diamond ruff, to trump his last heart loser with the spade ace. At the end, he is left with just enough spades to cope with the 4-1 trump break, together with his master heart.
